*Civil Discourse: An Engagement in Conversation Intended to Enhance Understanding

We hope you'll contribute to our conversations about the Cherry Hill Public School District.

I hope that everyone had a chance to relax during Spring Break and that all took time to be reflective and contemplative about life and the world around us all.

I always look forward to spring as the changes in our environment are real and truly visible. This past week I have found a reason to travel down Chapel Avenue to see the beauty of the Cherry blossom trees in full bloom. Each morning the birds seem to be active earlier and the buds and leaves on the trees are emerging each day. Our schools are alive with activity – I spent a delightful hour on the playground at Horace Mann yesterday, during lunch recess. Holding a meeting outside with children's laughter from the kickball game as the background "soundtrack" promoted positive discussion.

I began my day on Thursday at High School East, in Ms. Bennett's Sustainable Design class to observe student presentations on food kiosks, which they designed. I was fascinated by the volume of work and the depth of thought that went into each of the designs, one of which is pictured above. The students' projects were created to address the issue of "economic sustainability through redesign and relocation." Each student, or group of students, approached the same task in a different manner developing a variety of solutions address an individual need. It was exciting to watch them present, to take a group of adults through their thought process and their explanations of why their solution was the answer that would most benefit High School East. I will return to see Ms. Barnett and her students later in the spring to see the progression of their work.

As a school district, we currently provide learning opportunities and experiences to more than 11,300 students. Our students represent nearly 7,000 families who speak more than 57 languages at home, some who have lived in Cherry Hill for all of their lives, and some who have arrived within the past month from Philadelphia, from Latin America and from Asia. We are successful in educating our students and providing incredible opportunities, beyond the walls of the regular classrooms, for each of them. And, we can do better – we will do better.

We must engage ourselves in a cyclical process of continuous improvement through reflective practice and actionable movement forward. During the 2016-2017 academic year, we have been engaged in public discussion in the Cherry Hill Public Schools 2020 project. We have updated our web site to include a direct link to the work! I encourage you to come out to the Board of Education meetings, including committee meetings (the meetings in May are listed at right) to join the conversation – bring a friend, a neighbor! Please join in our conversation. Be willing to listen and to understand. Our responsibility as a community is to prepare our children to be successful in the world into which they are going to emerge, which is dramatically different than the one that any adult entered upon high school graduation.

We welcome all questions through our “Quick Question” portal on the District web site. Be sure to stay informed by following us on Twitter, Facebook and Instagram.
