Nic Esposito is an author, urban farmer, and entrepreneur from Philadelphia. In 2011, Nic published his first novel, Seeds of Discent, about urban farmers living and working in West Philadelphia. Since then his fiction and essays have appeared in numerous publications such as the Hidden City Daily, Grid Magazine, Plan Philly, Generocity.org, Green Scene Magazine, and Paradigm Magazine.

Along with his writing, Nic is also an accomplished lecturer and speaker. He has presented many lectures on urban farming and sustainability, most notably at the 2010 TEDX Philly conference, and he is the co-host and co-producer of the sustainability variety talk-show, Grid Alive.

Nic was the co-founder of the urban farm organization, Philly Rooted, in West Philadelphia, which developed two community gardens, an urban farm, and a youth growers' cooperative. He is currently the co-manager of Emerald Street Urban Farm.
